Some people have enough time to do everything that they want to, while some others are always rushing from task to task. They take time in everything. The first type of people also have a lot to do. The difference is that they are using their time more effectively and practicing good time management skills. Thus, time management requires the investment of a little planning to priorities and organize yourself. Once you plan, you will find that your day, your week and month fall in to place in an orderly fashion. You will find time for everything you need to do. The most important thing is to stay calm. The distinction between urgent and importance is the key to prioritising your time and workload at work or at home. Urgent tasks demand immediate attention.
