It is wholly impossible to teach "business" in a school or college, you can teach certain things useful as training for an intelligent businessman such as how to read and write well, and express himself properly. In this Sanskrit is excellent, and enough mathematics to heighten his power of concentration. And alongside his real education you can, if he wishes, give him a knowledge of book-keeping, though few businessmen know anything about it; and company organization, which most people leave to lawyers; and short-hand and typing. But the main part of the education of a businessman is not to fit him for this business but fit him to live. If a boy is to be trained for the coal and wood business, just for that, with no life apart from it and no soul, then he needs no college and college has nothing for him. Rub coal dust on his face and put him to work at fourteen. Don't cheat him into taking a six month's course on the "Theory of Nut Coal".
